CHECK-LIST OF NEW JERSEY IMPRINTS

TO THE END OF THE REVOLUTION

By Constance H. Humphrey

IT MAY be asked at the outset why it has been necessary to compile a check-list of New Jersey imprints when one already exists. Here reference is made to Mr. William Nelson's Check-list of the issues of the press of New Jersey 1723, 1728, 1754–1800, printed in Paterson, New Jersey, in 1899. In the first place, Mr. Nelson's entries are very brief, so brief in fact that in many cases it is very difficult and often almost impossible to identify them, and, in the second place, his work was done thirty years ago, so that it is only reasonable to suppose that since that time more early imprints have come to light. Therefore, I have undertaken to give a full entry for each imprint actually seen and as full an entry as could be found for those not seen. Also I have added more than ninety titles to that section of Mr. Nelson's list to which I have limited myself.

The earlier check-list which, as has been stated, covered the period between 1723 and 1800 contains five hundred and two items. As I fully expected to add some titles to this list and as five hundred and two items seemed a large number to handle adequately within the time at my disposal for this work, I have chosen to include only the colonial and revolutionary periods, or through the year 1783. For the period from the beginning of printing in New Jersey through the year 1783 Mr. Nelson has listed two hundred and ten items. To this number I have added more than ninety others which I have collected from various bibliographical sources and from libraries I have visited. This brings the total to more than three hundred titles—an increase of nearly 44 per cent. The Treaty of Paris was signed September 3, 1783, but as it is a very difficult matter to ascertain in just what part of a year a book was published it was decided to include all books bearing a 1783 imprint.

The history of printing begins later in New Jersey than in any of the other colonies with the exception of New Hampshire. This was due in part at least to the close proximity of New York and Philadelphia, each of which had flourishing printing presses. William Bradford printed in Philadelphia from 1685 to 1693 and in New York from 1693 to 1744,[1] while Andrew Bradford printed in Philadelphia from 1710 to 1742.[2] Another reason for the delay in establishing a permanent press in New Jersey until the latter half of the eighteenth century is given to us by Mr. Nelson who gives the following quotation from Queen Anne in her instructions to Lord Cornbury, governor of New Jersey, commissioning him "to provide all necessary orders, that no person keep any press for printing, nor that any book, pamphlet or other matters whatsoever be printed without your especial leave and license first obtained."[3] This precaution was taken to safeguard against any inconvenience arising through the liberty of the press.

The early laws and other official papers of New Jersey with two exceptions were published for a half-century in either New York by William Bradford or in Philadelphia by Andrew Bradford. For this reason I am including in this check-list an appendix which comprises a list of early official publications of New Jersey published in New York and Philadelphia or whose place of publication is doubtful. This list contains such entries as I have come across in my search for New Jersey imprints. It is by no means complete but may perhaps serve as a starting-point for a more complete study.

Thomas[1] tells us that presses were from time to time set up in the colony of New Jersey by Keimer and others from other colonies for the purpose of printing bills of credit or paper money, but that when the particular business in hand was completed the printers returned to their homes with their presses. This printing was usually done in Burlington, and it was there that Keimer sent Benjamin Franklin in 1727 after making a contract with the New Jersey legislature to print paper money. Franklin remarks that he "engraved various ornaments, and performed the business to general satisfaction."[2] When he had completed the task he returned to Philadelphia.

The first book with a New Jersey imprint was published in Perth Amboy, the colonial capital of New Jersey, by William Bradford in 1723. According to Nelson,[3] it seems that the Assembly or its clerk objected to the removal of the manuscript of the laws from New Jersey to foreign territory so that it became necessary for William Bradford to move his press from New York to New Jersey soil. On the other hand, Mr. Wroth[4] asserts that William Bradford took his press to Perth Amboy in 1723 to print paper money and it was while he was there that he printed this book of laws.[5] This second explanation seems more reasonable in view of the fact that printers did bring their presses to New Jersey. The title of this reads:

Anno Regni Georgii Regis Magnae Britanniae, Franciae & Hiberniae Decimo, At a Session of the General Assembly of the Colony of New-Jersey, begun the twenty fourth Day of September, Anno Domini 1723, and continued by Adjournments to the 30th Day of November following, at which time the following Acts were Published. [Royal Arms.] Printed by William Bradford in the City Of Perth-Amboy, 1723.

Of this imprint only two copies were located, one in the Historical Society of Pennsylvania and one in the Huntington Library in San Marino, California. The one in the Charlemagne Tower Collection at the Historical Society of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia was the only copy examined. Page 33 of this copy begins, "An act for the better and more effectual putting in execution an act of Assembly of this Province, made in 12th & 13th years of the reign of her late Majesty Queen Anne, entitled an act for regulating fences." This act fills the page at the bottom of which is the following colophon: "Published at Burlington the 30th of November, 1723."

The copy in the Huntington Library has but thirty-two pages plus the two unnumbered leaves, which in the Tower copy follow page 33. Therefore, it seems that page 33 of the Tower copy with its colophon was printed at another time.

At the same time another edition was published by Bradford in New York. This had thirty-two pages and the colophon read, "Published the 30th day of November, 1723." Two copies of this imprint were located, one at the New York Historical Society and the other at the New Jersey State Library at Trenton.

After this the laws were published in New York by William Bradford until 1728 when Samuel Keimer printed the Acts and laws enacted at a session held at Perth Amboy beginning the ninth of December, 1727. This was printed at Burlington, to which place Keimer brought his press from Philadelphia.[1] Some paper money was printed at the same time and, as has been stated before, Benjamin Franklin was connected with the work. I have located three copies of this second imprint. These are in the New Jersey State Library, the New York Historical Library, and the Huntington Library.

From 1728 until 1754 no titles of any kind actually bearing a New Jersey imprint have been found although Thomas, Nelson, and Sabin all agree on 1751 as the date of the setting-up of a press in Woodbridge by James Parker, New Jersey's first native printer.

The press at Woodbridge was for many years the only one in the colony; its founder, James Parker, was the son of Samuel Parker and the grandson of Elisha Parker. He was born in Woodbridge in 1714. He learned his trade with William Bradford in New York and practiced there for some years before settling in Woodbridge. Nelson listed seventy-eight issues of the Woodbridge press from 1754 to 1770 inclusive, two of which were printed by James Parker's son, Samuel Parker. To this number I have been able to add twelve other titles. Three of these are governor's proclamations of Jonathan Blecher, 1756, and are in the Huntington Library. One is a pamphlet of eight pages entitled The pernicious practice of dram drinking, set forth in its proper light. It was published in 1759 and is not listed in Evans. The copy in the New York Public Library was the only one I was able to locate. The Edward Watkinson Essay on oeconomy, reprinted by James Parker at Woodbridge in 1765, is listed by Nelson under the year 1767. As Mr. Nelson was such an authority on the subject of New Jersey imprints, I hesitate to say this is a mistake, and for this reason I have included both in my check-list—the one I saw under 1765 and the one listed by Nelson under 1767.

An interesting item the imprint of which reads "Printed by James Parker in New-Jersey" is believed to be a product of the Woodbridge Press and is known as the Woodbridge edition of the Stamp Act. It is a reprint of the London edition and was reprinted by Parker in 1765. Evans locates a copy in the Library of Congress which I was unable to examine. However, two other copies were located, both of which were examined. These are in the New York Public Library and in the New Jersey Historical Society Library.[1]

[1] In a conference with Mr. Wilberforce Eames, he said he is bringing out a paper in the near future in which he hopes to show that this is a product of the Burlington press rather than the Woodbridge press.

In 1765 Parker set up another press in Burlington and there printed Samuel Smith's famous History of New Jersey. He continued to print there until his death July 2, 1770, at which time he had besides the presses in Burlington and Woodbridge one in New Haven, Connecticut, and two in New York.

The next state printer was Isaac Collins, a native of Delaware, having been born in 1746 in New Castle County. He began to print in Burlington in 1770, having seized the opportunity occasioned by the death of Parker. Later he moved to Trenton, still continuing as the state printer. To Isaac Collins belongs the distinction of publishing the first permanent New Jersey newspaper, the New Jersey gazette, which was published from 1777 to 1779.

Shepard Kollock, one of New Jersey's most loyal citizens and printer of its revolutionary newspaper, has come somewhat into the limelight recently as a result of the celebration by the Elizabeth daily journal of Elizabeth, New Jersey, of its sesquicentennial on the sixteenth of February, 1929. In connection with the elaborate sesquicentennial number published by this newspaper the Memoirs of a later Shepard Kollock, a grandson of the Revolutionary War printer, have been published for the first time. From this document we learn many things as the writer of it spent much of his time as a small boy with his grandfather.

In the Kollock family there is a tradition that the family originally came from France. After the revocation of the Edict of Nantes which caused such turbulent times, the family fled to Holland where it sought refuge. Here, owing to the difficulty of pronunciation and spelling, the name which originally was "Colloque" was changed to "Kollock." Just when the ancestors of the printer came to America records fail to show.

Shepard Kollock was born in Lewes, Delaware, in September, 1750. His grandfather Simon, the son of Jacob Kollock, had married Comfort Shepheard. Their son was named Shephard. Upon reaching maturity Shephard Kollock married Mary Goddard. They in turn had a son who was given the name Shephard. This name was retained by the printer until middle life when through a desire to simplify it he shortened it to Shepard and so it remained to the end of his life. With regard to his education A. L. Johnson says:

> That he was a member of a family prominent both socially and politically would seem to determine the fact that the best educational advantages of the time would be provided. His character and future achievements, his respect for letters and culture, combine to render the tangible evidence of a more than ordinary background of educational preparation.[1]

Soon after the beginning of the Revolution he entered the army and served as first lieutenant with Colonel Neill of the Continental artillery. In June, 1777, he asked for a leave of absence, during which time he married Susan Arnett, daughter of Isaac and Hannah (White) Arnett.

Where Kollock learned the printing trade is uncertain: Philhower says: "He learned the art of printing in the office of the Pennsylvania Chronicle at Philadelphia,"[2] while Nelson[3] asserts that he probably learned the trade with James Adams at Wilmington.

His first location as a printer was at Chatham where he did some excellent work. Just how many Chatham imprints there are to Kollock's credit I am not certain. It may be that some have not yet been discovered. Outside of the New Jersey journal, a discussion of which is taken up in the following paragraph, I have listed twenty-two titles printed by Shepard Kollock in Chatham. Mr. Elmer T. Hutchinson, of Elizabeth, New Jersey, who is working on an elaborate biographical study of Kollock, believes these to be all that are known to date.

The New Jersey journal, which is the parent so to speak of the Elizabeth daily journal, was established in Chatham, New Jersey, February 16, 1779, by Shepard Kollock. Up to this time, with the exception of the New Jersey gazette printed in Burlington and later in Trenton by Isaac Collins and begun in 1777, New Jersey had no newspaper of its own. It had depended upon the splendid papers of surrounding colonies for its news. After the outbreak of the Revolution several of these had to cease publication, others moved to distant points, subscription prices increased, and delivery by post-riders became uncertain. All of these led to the establishment of New Jersey's first newspapers.

New York fell into the hands of the British, and newspapers there remained loyal to the crown. Through the advice of General Knox, Kollock began printing the New Jersey journal to give the patriots and the army of General Washington the news from the point of view of the patriots. Washington's army was encamped five miles from Chatham at Morristown and subscribed liberally for the paper. The army officers often furnished the paper on which it was written. Chatham was chosen by Kollock as a suitable place to publish the paper because it was "a town over the hills where no British soldiery ever trod."[1]

One item of Kollock's which seemed almost impossible to locate was the Ebenezer Elmer's An elegy on the late Francis Barber, Esq.; lieutenant colonel commandant of the second New-Jersey regiment. It was printed at Chatham by Shepard Kollock in 1783. Heartman has published a very fine reprint edition which was seen in several libraries. He states in the Preface that this is a reprint of the only copy, but no clue as to the location of the copy is given. It was located by me rather unexpectedly in the Henry E. Huntington Library in California.

At the close of the war Kollock moved to New Brunswick where Queen's College (now Rutgers) was located. Here he entered into partnership with Shelly Arnett, and the firm of Kollock and Arnett was formed. On Tuesday, October 14, 1783, the first number of the Political intelligencer and New-Jersey advertiser was issued by the newly established firm. From here Kollock moved to Elizabethtown where over fifty publications were issued before he retired from business in 1818.

Printing in Newark began in 1776 with Hugh Gaine as the printer. Hugh Gaine had been a printer in New York from 1752 until after the war in 1776 when he went to Newark.[1] The first Newark imprint is now a very rare item, there being only two known copies, and only one of these is a perfect copy. Mr. Nelson apparently did not know of it as it is not included in his list. The title referred to is Hutchins' improved, the complete entry being as follows:

Hutchins' improved: being an almanack and ephemeris of the motions of the sun and moon; the true places and aspects of the planets; the rising and setting of the sun; and the rising, setting and southing of the moon, for the year of our Lord 1777: Being the first after leap year. . . . . By John Nathan Hutchins, philom. Newark, in New Jersey, Printed and sold by Hugh Gaine [1776] [36] p. 17cm.

The owner of the only perfect copy is Mr. Louis Bamberger, of Newark, New Jersey, who very kindly allowed me to examine it. The other copy, which lacks two leaves, was once owned by Mr. Wilberforce Eames and is now in the Henry E. Huntington Library.

The only issue of the Newark Press before 1783 listed by Mr. Nelson is the New York gazette, Nos. 1301–7, September 21–November 2, 1776. Two distinct papers were issued as the New York gazette; and the weekly mercury, from No. 1301, September 21, 1776, to No. 1307, November 2, 1776, one in New York and one in Newark. The Newark series was put forth with news favorable to the Americans, while the regular New York series favored British contentions. The only known file of the Newark series is in the New York Public Library and was examined. I also saw one number—1302—in the American Antiquarian Society in Worcester, and part of the same number was located in the New York Historical Society.

Soon after the Stamp Act was passed but before it was put into operation there was published what some authorities call a newspaper but what is looked upon today as a bibliographical curiosity. As so little has been hitherto written about it and the device which appears at the head of its title considerable space is being given to it in this essay. On September 21, 1765, there appeared what was entitled the Constitutional Courant containing matters interesting to liberty—and no wise repugnant to loyalty. The author, "Andrew Marvel," introduced the paper to the public with the following address:

When a new public paper makes its appearance, the reader will naturally be curious to know from whence it came, the publisher, and the design of it. To gratify that curiosity, know, reader, that the publisher having formerly acquired a competent knowledge of the printing business, for his own amusement, furnished himself with a set of proper materials; and the authors of the following pieces have acquainted him that they applied to the Printers in New York, who refused to publish them in their newspapers—not because they disapproved them, or were apprehensive of danger, but purely because several of their friends had been anxious on their account and particularly desired them to be careful not to publish anything that might give the enemies of liberty an advantage, which they would be glad to take over them; and as these pieces are thought to be wrote with greater freedom than anything that has yet appeared in the public prints, they thought proper to shew as much compliance to the advice of their friends as to desire to be excused, and to return the copies. But I, who am under no fear to disobliging either friend or enemies, was pleased with the opportunity of turning my private amusement to the public good; I not only undertook to publish them, but now inform my countrymen, that I shall occasionally publish anything else that falls in my way, of liberty, of virtue, of religion, and my country, of love and reverence to its laws and constitution, and an unshaken loyalty to the king—And so I bid you heartily farewell.

ANDREW MARVEL[1]

The imprint reads: "Printed by Andrew Marvel, at the Sign of the Bribe refused on Constitutional Hill, North-America." In the center of the title is a device of a snake cut into pieces to represent the colonies and with the motto "Join or Die."

The skit, as Matthews[2] calls it, became very popular. A large edition was published and distributed throughout the country, especially in New York where it was sold by hawkers. It was reprinted twice, supposedly in New York and Boston, so that we have at least three forms of it, all bearing the same date but each one different to some extent from the other two. These three editions have come to be known as Forms A, B, and C.

[1] Constitutional courant.

[2] "Snake devices, 1754–76," Publications of the Colonial Society of Massachusetts, XI (1906–7), 421.

Form A is printed on both sides of the sheet, has three columns of equal width to the page, and at the top of the first page has title with the snake device cut into eight parts, very similar to Franklin's device of 1754 only that the words "Join or Die" are above the device while in Franklin's they are below. The pieces are accompanied by initials of the colonies. The imprint reads:

> Printed by ANDREW MARVEL, at the Sign > of the Bribe refused, on Constitutional Hill, North-> America.

Matthews has located four copies of Form A. These are in the following libraries: the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, the Library Company of Philadelphia, the New York Public Library, and the Public Record Office in London. The copy in the New York Public Library was examined by me.

Form B consists of a sheet printed on both sides with three columns to the page. Here the first and second columns of each page are of equal width, while the third column is slightly narrower than the other two. At the top of the first page is the device of the snake cut into eight parts with the title "Join or Die" above. The snake differs slightly from that in Form A. The tail instead of turning to the left turns to the right in B. Another slight difference is that the initials are not followed by periods and are arranged differently. Form B has the imprint in a single line across the bottom of the second page. Of this form Matthews has also located four copies. These are in the Boston Athenaeum, Harvard College, Massachusetts Historical Society, and Yale College. The copy in the Harvard College Library was the only one examined.

Form C is a broadside (printed on one side only) in three columns of equal width. This form lacks the snake device and its motto "Join or Die." It lacks also an article by Philopatriae and an item about changes in the ministry in England, both of which are contained in Forms A and B. The imprint comes nearly at the bottom of column 3 and is preceded by a line of crowns. It is in two lines arranged as follows:

> Printed by ANDREW MARVEL, at the Sign of > the bribe refused, on Constitutional Hill, North-America.

Below the imprint and finishing the column is a device somewhat like royal arms. Of this form Matthews has located but two copies: one in the Harvard College Library and one in the Library Company of Philadelphia. The former was examined.

The attempts of Matthews and others to ascertain the author and place of publication of the Constitutional courant have not been entirely satisfactory. It excited some notice, so that a council of the government was called to look into its authorship but no discovery was made. One hawker was questioned as to where it was printed. He, as he had been instructed, replied, "At Peter Hassenclever's iron-works please your honor,"[1] Peter Hassenclever being the owner of a well-known iron works in New Jersey. Afterward publications of this sort frequently appeared with the imprint "Printed at Peter Hassenclever's ironworks."

Cadwallader Colden in writing to Franklin on October 1, 1765, said:

> My regard to you makes me give you the trouble of the inclosed Printed Paper, one or more bundles of which I am well informed were delivered to the Post Rider at Woodbridge by James Parker were distributed by the Post Riders in several parts of this Colony & I believe likewise in the neighboring Colonies: the doing of which was kept secret from the Post Master in this Place. It is believed that this Paper was Printed by Parker after the Printers in this Place had refused to do it, perhaps you may be able to judge from the Types.
> As he is Secretary to the General Post Office in America, I am under a necessity of taking notice of it to the Secretary of State by the return of the

[1] Ibid.

Packet which is daily expected, & I am unwilling to do this without giving you previous notice by a Merchant Ship which Sails tomorrow.[1]

In a letter to Henry Seymour Conway dated October 12, 1765, Colden wrote:

Since the last which I had the honour to write to you of the 23d of September, this Town has remained quiet tho' inflamatory Papers continue to be publish'd, exciting the People to oppose the Execution of the Act of Parliament for laying a stamp Duty in the Colonies. The most remarkable of these Papers is inclosed. This was distributed along the Post Roads by the Post-Riders. I examined the Post Master in this Place to know how this came to be done. He assured me that it was without his knowledge, That he had examined the Post Riders & found that one or more Bundles of them were deliver'd at Woodbridge in New Jersey to the Post Rider by James Parker Secretary to the General Post office in America. Parker was formerly Printer in this Place, & has now a Printing Press & continues to print occasionally. It is believed that this Paper was Printed by him. The Gentlemen of the Council think it prudent at this time to delay the makeing more particular Enquiry least it should be the occasion or raising the Mob, which it is thought proper by all means to avoid.[2]

These two letters give us an allusion to contemporary opinion. Thomas said, "It was printed by William Goddard, at Parker's printing house at Burlington—Goddard having previously obtained Parker's permission occasionally to use his press." Thomas began the preparation of a second edition of his work which was published by the American Antiquarian Society in 1874. In this 1874 edition the foregoing extract is exactly the same except that "Burlington" has been changed to "Woodbridge." Thomas gives no explanation of this change.

The conclusion reached by Matthews as to the authorship of the Constitutional courant seems to be that it was William Goddard. His reasons for this conclusion he gives as follows:

First, there is Thomas's assertion to that effect; and, while Thomas was often inaccurate, he had an unrivalled knowledge of the printers and printing of his time, and his statements about publishers and printers must always be received with respect & rejected with caution. Secondly, the Library Company of Philadelphia owns two documents, printed in 1773, signed "Andrew Marvel," both of which are in the catalogue of that library attributed to God-

dard. . . . . While this whole matter is obscure, there seems to be no good reason for rejecting Thomas's conclusion that the Constitutional Courant "was printed by William Goddard, at Parker's printing house—Goddard having previously obtained Parker's permission to use his press."[1]

Matthews also says the place of publication is equally difficult to determine and suggests that an examination of the type might determine the place. For a fuller account of this whole subject see Matthews' article on "The snake devices, 1754–1776, and the Constitutional courant, 1765," in the Publications of the Colonial Society of Massachusetts.[2]

Another particularly interesting imprint is the earliest history of New Jersey written by Samuel Smith and published in Burlington by James Parker in 1765. The author, an honest, sturdy Quaker, was about forty-five when he wrote the book. Tyler characterizes it as a dry, ponderous performance, a compilation of dull documents and dull facts, "The whole written, doubtless, with great patience, and only to be read by an abundant exercise of the same virtue."[3]

Sabin[4] says there were two different settings of the type for the title-page, one having the imprint date "MDCCLXV" and the other punctuated "M,DCC,LXV." The spacing of the letters also varied in these two settings so that the relation of the letters to those above and below differs slightly. Through examination of several copies he found the books to be made of a mixture of sheets from both impressions. I was fortunate enough to be able to locate twelve copies of which nine were actually seen; only two of them had the imprint punctuated.

A reference to a broadside which seems to be very rare was found in the New York Public Library. It is An act for the further conservation of timber within the Colony of New Jersey passed the seventeenth of March, 1759. The only reference I could find was here and was a facsimile reproduction clipped from the Catalogue of the American Art Association for April 6, 1916, item No. 789. A note "probably printed at Woodbridge by James Parker" was given. It was unknown to Nelson, Evans, and Sabin and is apparently the only copy. The American Art Association sold it to Mr. Charles F. Heartman, a dealer, but Mr. Heartman kept no record of the person to whom he sold it. I was unable to trace it farther.

In order to study the output of the New Jersey press during this period I have divided them into classes by subject as follows:

Acts	64	Religion	33
Journals	19	Magazines and newspapers	18
Votes	69	Poetry	2
Almanacs	25	Slavery	3
Broadsides	29	Miscellaneous	36
Education	10

There are perhaps more subjects than one would at first expect, especially as printing was new here, and, as has been intimated before, as authors were in the habit of sending their works outside the state for publication. Then, too, times were troublous as this period takes in the years both preceding and covering the war.

Of acts I found trace of sixty-four of which sixty were located, and one or more copies of each examined. Of the four which have not been located two are listed as Nos. 8680 and 8947 in Evans' American bibliography. They are both appendixes to the Laws of New Jersey, published in 1752, and appear as an appendix to the second volume of the compilation which was published in 1761 by Nevill. Since No. 8680 has 264 pages and No. 8947 has only 64 pages, they are apparently two different editions.

The New Jersey State Library in Trenton, as would be expected, has a large percentage of these acts. Their collection includes fifty-one titles. The Public Record Office in London, England, has a large collection of New Jersey government publications which includes both those published in New York and Philadelphia and later in New Jersey. This collection has items published up to 1776, when friendly relations with England were broken off. The Public Record Office has thirty of these acts.

There is a question about one imprint which I have included. It is:

> The acts of the General Assembly of the Province of New-Jersey, from the time of the surrender of the Government in the second year of the reign of Queen Anne, to this present time, being the twenty-fifth year of the reign of King George the second. . . . By Samuel Nevill. . . . . [n.p.] Printed by William Bradford, printer to New Jersey, 1752.

In the Tower collection[1] this is attributed to William Bradford in Philadelphia, but Thomas[2] says that this edition was printed at Woodbridge by James Parker. For this reason I have included it in the main list.

By far the greatest number of the acts were collections of acts of the General Assembly, but there were a few which were of such general interest as to have been published separately as well. Among these are An act for naturalizing Christian Syberberg, and others; An act for better regulating the militia, 1777, and so forth. Some other individual acts will be taken up under the subject of broadsides as many were issued in this form.

Under the journals both the journals themselves and extracts from the journals are included. There were found nineteen entries in all under this heading. All but one of these has been examined. This one is an Evans[3] entry which is as follows:

> Journal of the proceedings of the Legislative Council of the State of New-Jersey from September 3, to October 11, 1777. Burlington: Printed by Isaac Collins, 1777.

No collation is given and no copies are located. This is a journal for part of the proceedings of the Legislative Council which convened at Princeton on the twenty-seventh day of August, 1776, and continued by adjournments. The proceedings for August 27, 1776, to June 7, 1777, were printed in Burlington by Isaac Collins in 1777 and have ninety-five pages. The journal following it covers the same General Assembly for September 3, 1777, to October 11, 1777, and was printed in Trenton by Isaac Collins in 1779. It is paged [97]–126. Neither of these is listed in Evans. They seem to be continuous, so that it seems entirely possible that the Evans entry is an earlier edition of the second of these two which he does not list. The New Jersey State Library owns fourteen of the nineteen journals listed.

[1] Charlemagne Tower collection of American colonial laws (1890), p. 164.

[2] Op. cit. (1st ed.), II, 121. [3] No. 15463.

The last group of government publications and the largest group of all is the votes and proceedings of the General Assembly of which there are sixty-nine. All but two have been located in one or more places. The New Jersey State Library has sixty-five and the Public Record Office in London has thirty-seven. A very few more may also be found in the New York Public Library, the New York Historical Society Library, and the Library Company of Philadelphia.

From government publications we turn now to things of a more general nature. The first group is almanacs. The Burlington almanack for the year 1771, printed at Burlington by Isaac Collins in 1770, is the first almanac printed in the state of New Jersey. This first number, which is listed in Evans but not located by him, I was not able to locate. The Burlington almanack continued regularly until 1778 when the title changed to the New Jersey almanack, which title continued through the close of the period covered. The change in the title came with the removal of Isaac Collins with his printing press to Trenton. I saw and examined at least one copy of all numbers with the exception of the first.

The pseudonymous author, Timothy Trueman, was also the author of the first two numbers of another almanac the first number of which came out in 1780 under the title the New-Jersey pocket almanack. This was also published by Collins in Trenton. No copies of this almanac for 1781 or for 1782 were found, but two copies of the one for 1783 were seen. Of an edition for 1784 no trace was found. It may have died with the one for 1783.

There is a third almanac which was begun in 1779 and printed in Chatham by Shepard Kollock. This was called the United States almanack and was the same type of almanac as the Burlington and was about the same size. It ran from 1779 to 1782 as near as I could learn. There may have been later numbers but no trace of them was found.

The Hutchins' improved almanac of Newark has been described in an earlier paragraph.

As broadsides are so perishable and so easily pass out of existence it is only reasonable to believe that many have entirely disappeared. Those listed, twenty-eight in number, cover a variety of subjects. Many of them are proclamations of the Governor or letters from him to the Council or from the Council to the Governor. As has been stated before, many separate acts were issued in this form, and we find acts for preserving the timber within the colony of New Jersey, for procuring provisions for the use of the army, and for recovering the arrears of certain taxes.

One of the largest bonds in uniting the people in the central colonies was the organized Presbyterian church. Not much time elapsed before the ministers realized that it was necessary for them to have schools in which to educate young men to take their places as it was out of the question for them to think of sending them all to Scotland (the colleges in the North being either Congregational or Episcopal). It was out of this need that Princeton College evolved. It was originally known as the College of New Jersey and was opened at Elizabethtown in May, 1747, under the presidency of Rev. Jonathan Dickinson. In October of the same year President Dickinson died and Rev. Aaron Burr was selected to fill his place. The college was temporarily transferred to Newark, from which place it was finally moved to Princeton, the first building, Nassau Hall, being opened in 1756. The third president was Jonathan Edwards and the fourth Samuel Davies.

The ten books classified as educational help to give a picture of the beginnings of education in New Jersey which naturally centered about Princeton and its founding. In this group and the one of religious books are titles written by men who were connected with Princeton in its early days. James Parker in 1760 published at Woodbridge a Catalogue of books in the library of the College of New-Jersey. The library had at that time less than twelve hundred volumes. In the Preface to the Catalogue President Davies says, "Few modern authors adorn the shelves. This defect is sensibly felt in the study of Mathematics and the Newtonian Philosophy in which the students have but very imperfect helps either from books or other instruments." In 1764 Parker printed An account of the College of New-Jersey in which were described the "methods of government, modes of instruction, manner and expenses of living in the same." Ross's Complete introduction to the Latin tongue . . . ., published principally for the use of the grammar school at Nassau Hall, in Princeton, and recommended to all who design to send their children to New-Jersey College, was published in its second edition in Woodbridge in 1760; the first edition was published in New York by James Parker in 1752. In the March 5, 1783, issue of the New Jersey journal Burr's Latin grammar was advertised. Dilworth's New guide to the English tongue and his Spelling book came out in 1782.

The beginnings of educational literature in New Jersey and of religious literature there are closely linked as the same men were prominent in both fields. For this reason the religious books will be discussed next.

In the subject of religion there are some thirty-three titles for this period which include two editions of Isaac Watts's Psalms; a New Testament; a collection of hymns, poems, and spiritual songs; a history of the Quakers; and many sermons. Samuel Davies, before mentioned in connection with the founding of Princeton College, was the author of a sermon entitled "The curse of cowardice," preached with a view to raise a company to help fight the French and Indian wars. Other sermons covered the range of subjects peculiar to the time and were on such subjects as regeneration, infant baptism, the saints' everlasting rest, and like subjects.

It has already been noted that New Jersey was for a long time without a newspaper of her own. Up to 1783, with the exception of the Constitutional courant and the few issues of the New York gazette which were published in Newark, there had been only three newspapers published there. The New Jersey gazette, published from 1777 to 1779 by Isaac Collins in Burlington, was the first. The New Jersey journal, begun in 1779 at Chatham and printed by Shepard Kollock, was the second and is alive today under the name of the Elizabeth daily journal. The third, the Political intelligencer and New Jersey advertiser was established also by Kollock in New Brunswick on Tuesday, October 14, 1783, and was published by him for some time.

New Jersey can boast of one magazine before 1783. This is the New American magazine printed in Woodbridge by James Parker from January, 1758, to March, 1760. It contained two continuous features, "The history of North America," by Samuel Nevill, and "The traveller," by Thomas Gage. Both of these ran through several numbers. There were a poet's corner, a chronological diary, a historical chronicle, and a list of naval engagements in it each month.

One book of poetry published during the period under discussion was a reprint of a poem nearly seven hundred lines long on a life of retirement and serene meditation which was written by a young man twenty-four years of age just entering the law profession in New York. Philosophic solitude, which was the title of this poem, was signed by a "Young gentleman educated at Yale College" who proved to be William Livingston. It was first printed in New York in 1747. The New Jersey edition was printed in Trenton by Isaac Collins in 1782.

It is interesting to find that at this early period slavery was one of the topics under discussion. I found three works on the subject— two published in 1773 and the third in 1783. Granville Sharp in 1773 wrote an essay in which he tried to prove from Scripture the inconsistency of slavery with humanity and religion. Anthony Benezet first in 1773 and later in 1783 wrote on the inconsistency of slavery with the ideals of American liberty. Jacob Green's fast-day sermon has a postscript of one page which was a plan or scheme for emancipating slaves.

The last group includes thirty-six titles. I have called it miscellany because it is so varied in its subject matter and contains only one or at the most two items on any one subject. Into this group I have put histories, orations, bills in chancery, essays, works on politeness, economy, and so forth. One curious title falling within this group is a small volume entitled The oeconomy of human life, and is a translation from an Indian manuscript written by an ancient Bramin "to which is prefixed an account of the manner in which the said manuscript was discovered." It was printed by Isaac Collins at Burlington in 1771. The only copy found is in the Trenton Public Library.

The experiences which a bibliographer has in compiling a check-list such as this one are many and varied and almost without exception of interest. A discussion of the New Jersey libraries visited will be taken up first as that is obviously the starting-point. The Historical Society of New Jersey in Newark is very rich in early New Jersey imprints. The acting librarian, Miss Johnson, was very helpful not only in opening to me the resources of that library but in giving advice and in suggesting individuals and institutions that might be of aid, chief among these being Mr. Elmer T. Hutchinson, of Elizabeth, and Mr. Louis Bamberger, of Newark. The New Jersey State Library at Trenton, of which Mr. John P. Dullard is librarian, has by far the most complete collection of New Jersey colonial and revolutionary documents. Here I received very generous aid, as I did also in the Trenton Public Library of which Mr. Howard L.

Hughes is librarian. The collection in the last-mentioned library is small, as one would expect. The Princeton University Library has a large collection of Jerseyana which was given them by Mr. William Nelson, but unfortunately few of these are old enough to fall within the period covered by this study. Mr. George M. Peck, who is in charge of the rare books there, was very kind in making the contents of the library available. This exhausts the list of New Jersey libraries visited. The Free Public Library of New Brunswick, which is said to be the oldest public library in New Jersey, was written to but replied that they have no New Jersey imprints as early as 1783. The Theological Seminary and Rutgers University both reported they have some early New Jersey imprints but it seemed wise not to visit them because it was reported that the collections are in such condition that it is probable that nothing new would have been found.

From what has already been said about the printing of New Jersey books in New York and Philadelphia it is to be expected that these cities would have good collections of early New Jersey imprints. This is, indeed, true. The New York Public Library and the New York Historical Society Library are both very rich in these early imprints, and both libraries were very gracious and helpful in making their possessions available. The Historical Society of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia and the Library Company of Philadelphia contain some items found nowhere else, and were very kind in getting them out for me to see.

One library which has an especially fine collection of Jerseyana is the Henry E. Huntington Library in San Marino, California. From Mr. Willard O. Waters, of the department of Americana there, a list of fifty-four items was received. Only three or four of these are credited to this library in Evans and several of them I had not heard of before. Here, then, for the first time are listed the holdings of this library in this particular field. What a great thing it is for scholars on the Pacific Coast to have close at hand such a collection of Americana, for, of course, it must be understood that the New Jersey imprints are but a part of the larger collection of Americana which is in the possession of this library. The list included the only known copy of Ebenezer Elmer's An elegy on the late Francis Barbor; also a copy of Hutchins' improved almanac for 1777, published by Hugh Gaine in Newark. This copy lacks two leaves but is very valuable as it and Mr. Louis Bamberger's copy are the only known copies. The collection contains the first two New Jersey imprints—for 1723 and 1728—and a good proportion of official publications, almanacs, and other general publications. The Public Record Office in London, England, is particularly rich in New Jersey colonial and revolutionary documents. They looked up a list of over forty items for me and found they had almost all of them. In addition to this I had another list of some sixty-two items looked up there. These two lists were almost entirely acts and votes, and the Library there contained about sixty-six of them.

Through correspondence it was learned from Dr. James I. Wyer that the New York State Library at Albany possesses twenty-seven of these imprints. They may have been acquired since the fire in 1911 and are not credited to them in the Evans Bibliography. The majority of the twenty-seven are New Jersey acts, but three almanacs and James and John Relly's book of Christian hymns and poems are also included in the number.

Mr. V. V. Parma, of the rare-book department of the Library of Congress, was very helpful and did as much as he could in the short time I was able to spend there. Other places, such as the John Carter Brown Library in Providence, Rhode Island; the American Antiquarian Society in Worcester, Massachusetts; the Massachusetts Historical Society; the Harvard College Library; and the Boston Athenaeum in Boston, have small collections and were very generous in letting me examine what they have. The following is a list of the libraries visited:

American Antiquarian Society, Worcester, Mass.
Boston Athenaeum, Boston, Mass.
Columbia University, New York City.

Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass.
Historical Society of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.
John Carter Brown, Providence, R.I.

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST
1723-1783

Prefatory Note

IN THE following pages the effort has been to make a check-list of all books, pamphlets, and broadsides published in New Jersey prior to 1784. The list is manifestly incomplete and any additions or corrections will be gratefully appreciated by its compiler.

Some titles have been included which have no apparent imprint as the probability is they were printed in New Jersey and it has been thought better to err on the side of inclusion rather than that of exclusion.

Evans numbers are given for everything included in the Evans Bibliography. A very few Sabin numbers are given. These are such as came to hand—no effort was made to include all Sabin numbers.

I have tried to locate at least one copy of each item listed. In this I have not been entirely successful, as there are still a small group which I have not been able to locate anywhere. In the following list the asterisk (*) means the copy was seen by me, while the single quotation (') means the location of the title in that library was verified through correspondence. Many titles have been located which are not listed in Evans. Of those listed in Evans many additional copies have been located. In both cases these copies are indicated by setting the initials of the library in italic capitals.

The collation of those items listed in Evans has been kept as in Evans except that the square brackets [ ] and parentheses ( ) have been removed and the "p." placed after the number of pages instead of before. This has been done to make the collation of all items uniform. Those taken from other sources are collated according to the Library of Congress custom.

A single entry has been made each year for newspapers. For a chronological list of the newspapers published in New Jersey during this period with location of copies see Mr. Clarence Brigham's list.[1]

The compiler wishes to acknowledge with appreciation the help given by the librarians corresponded with and visited, also that of Miss Minnie Earl Sears and Miss Isadore Gilbert Mudge, of the faculty of the school of library service at Columbia University.

25. GAGE, THOMAS, 1597–1655. The traveller. Part 1. Containing, a journal of three thousand three hundred miles, through the mainland of South-America. By Mr. Thomas Gage, an Englishman; and a missionary friar in New-Spain, twelve years. In which is set forth, his journey from St. John de Ulva to Mexico, with a description of that great city as in former times, and at present; as also his travels through many other parts of New-Spain; with an account of their government, castles, ports, and commodities; and also their ecclesiastical state, in which the lascivious intrigues, and wicked lives of the Jesuits in those parts, and their grand impositions upon the poor ignorant natives, are truly delineated. To which is added, the policy, manners, behavior, arts and sciences, religious rites and ceremonies, feasts, and solemnities of the native Indians. Concluding with the wonderful conversion of the author to the Protestant religion; his escape from the Spaniards in South-America; his return to England, his native country, and the reception he met with there by his relations, after an absence of four-and-twenty years. To be published monthly in the New-American magazine. Woodbridge, in New-Jersey; Printed and sold by James Parker. 1758.

This was prefixed to the New American magazine for 1758, 1759, and 1760.

THE MEDICAL LITERATURE OF MEXICO AND CENTRAL AMERICA

By NATHAN VAN PATTEN

THE medical literature of Mexico and Central America is an important part of the medical literature of the world. Comparatively little attention has been given to this subject by medical historians and bibliographers. This is rather surprising since medicine has passed through the same course of development in these countries during the last four centuries as it has in Europe and North America. Many of the phenomena presented in Mexican and Central American medical history are the very ones which medical historians have considered most worthy of study. The earliest publications upon particular medical subjects have generally appeared in Mexico contemporaneously with those published in Europe.

Mexico and the countries of Central America have been visited by frequent epidemics of yellow fever, dysentery, malaria, typhus, cholera, and plague. These have been observed by contemporary writers whose printed and manuscript works deserve the study of epidemiologists. The medical aspects of the contact between the Spaniards and the indigenous civilizations of Mexico are unsurpassed in interest and importance by any similar occurrence in history. We know from their writings that the first Spanish priests and physicians to visit Mexico were greatly impressed by the richness of the native pharmacopeia and that many of the native drugs were soon introduced into the European materia medica. The great controversy concerning the origin of syphilis (which remains unsettled) has a Mexican
